What to Watch For

Your First Grader Will:

- Identify letters, words and sentences.
- Read 100 commonly used words.
- Read aloud grade-appropriate text.
- Learn new words through instruction, stories read aloud and independent reading.
- Write or draw a response that shows understanding of the story that has been read.
- Follow a writing process that includes planning, writing, improving, and completing pieces of writing.

What You Can Do:

- Read, read, read to your child! Talk about what you're reading.
- Talk with your child about the books they're reading. Ten to 20 minutes of daily independent reading is part of every first graders' homework.
- Talk with your child about the books their teacher reads to them each day.
- Listen to your child read.

- Point out words everywhere – on signs, cereal boxes, advertisements, and store names. Read and/or have your child read them to you.
- Talk about words and their meanings.
- Ask your child what he or she is reading and writing in school.
- Encourage your child to draw and write by making crayons, pencils, markers and paper available.
- Ask your child to write their name and words on the pictures they draw.

Following is an example of a reading passage that a first grader should be able to read by the end of first grade.
